LITERATURE REVIEW

Work Management

Performance management according to (Hidayati et al., 2014) is a process of managing, directing, planning and completing employee work results and management always focuses on maximizing employee work performance. And performance management according to (Rasyada & Idawati, 2021) reveals that performance management is a progressive operational process in measuring performance development in an organization. Meanwhile, according to (Rismawan, 2017), performance management is a means of communication that is carried out continuously within the company structure between subordinates and managers.
This communication system includes a number of activities aimed at creating clarity in procedures and work processes to be carried out by workers. Therefore, feedback or two-way communication will be a way to jointly improve the quality of employee performance and avoid ineffective employee performance. Performance management according to (Tsauri, 2014) explains that employees must understand the company's goals, vision and mission, and employees must follow the goals achieved by the company, therefore employees must improve their performance to produce quality performance. And according to (Firdaus, 2018), performance management is also a process that aims to create better value in a company, team or individual by measuring and managing performance management, so that employees not only achieve personal goals but also play an important role in the organization. achieving goals. This creates greater motivation and satisfaction to achieve company goals or objectives.

In several research sources it can be explained that performance management above can be understood as an active process of managing company management resources that adapt to performance by implementing a continuous and continuous communication process regarding the company's vision and mission. in an effective approach. Strategy is the driving force that helps a company achieve its goals. And performance management is a series of activities starting from implementation planning, reviewing, monitoring and evaluating employee performance and these activities also need to be carried out continuously.

Performance

(Marsudi & Robie, 2021) Performance is the level of success in completing a particular task, and performance is also successful because a person or individual completes the task effectively and efficiently so that the work is successful. What is obtained will be of quality value. Performance plays an important role in the work process of employees in an organization to realize optimal, orderly, timely and targeted work results. Therefore its performance is used as a key factor in changing the direction of a company. (Marsudi & Robie, 2021).

According to (Prawisma, 2017) performance is the actual or actual behavioral attitude that exists in a person or individual towards something, work performance creates effective work results for employees depending on their role in the company. Quality employee performance will play an important role for the company in helping to improve or develop the business with human resources and asset capacity, the results of employee work in the company are an internal or individual form, that each employee benefits from allowances and less and has a standard level differences regarding the ability of each employee to carry out their duties in their respective fields. (Nursam, 2017).

From several theories above, it can be concluded that performance is a result of work created by employees when carrying out tasks or activities carried out by employees to achieve the goals, mission and vision of the company or organization. In conclusion, performance is the result of the work of individuals in a company who carry out activities or carry out them in accordance with their responsibilities and can have a significant impact on a company's performance.
Performance Management System

According to (Damayanti & Karim, n.d.) explains that a performance management system is an assessment system based on systematic and certain procedures to present and communicate information that reflects the performance and characteristics of an effective process that allows analysis as a guide for taking the required activities.

Performance management activities must be considered as data that must be related to other broad elements. A maximum management system will increase profits for the company because it can carry out all aspects of the company.

Performance Assessment

The human resources function is related to the performance management process. According to (Utama, 2019) performance appraisal is a process within a company that requires companies to evaluate, assess and measure employee performance accurately and thoroughly. This assessment process is very important to the company's effectiveness, such as training activities and employee performance development. Therefore, performance appraisals can be used as important information for companies to evaluate employee performance and provide feedback to employees about actual performance.

According to (Amin, 2015) performance appraisal is an absolute activity process that must be carried out to determine the work results achieved by each employee in a company. Meanwhile, according to (Eko, 2017) explains that the definition of performance appraisal is employee performance evaluation which plays a role in measuring employee performance in performance management activities.

Therefore, performance appraisal measures or evaluates employees who have achieved the level of performance expected by the company. From several applied sources, performance management assessment has become a very significant role for companies in carrying out a performance process. Performance appraisal is a supporting factor for the success of the performance management process in the company. Therefore, performance assessment indirectly reflects a company's strategic plan.

Performance Evaluation

(Kirana, 2017) explains that performance evaluation is an evaluative argument regarding an individual's attitudes, behavior and/or rewards as a basis for planning decisions for individual training and development. Performance evaluation is carried out in the performance assessment and performance measurement process. From the results produced by performance evaluation, it will provide feedback on performance goals and objectives which will be carried out in stages to improve performance in the future. Therefore, performance evaluation is also needed in the decision-making process regarding human resources by providing input, development and training, transfers and dismissals.

According to (Mauliana et al., 2018), he believes that performance evaluation is a policy result that has value from the results of policy goals or targets. Performance evaluation is very helpful in making policy decisions in an organization. From several opinions about performance evaluation theory, the conclusion is that the comparison of a goal to be achieved in solving a problem with a real event, so it can be explained that performance evaluation carries out an analysis of events whether the policy should be reviewed or continue.
